Museum Lecture Hall, The Getty Center

Over the last forty years, boundaries between visual art, dance, and performance have become increasingly fluid, with many artists moving continuously between multiple types of creative activity. Some of the most important art works from this period defy easy classification, and at times it is difficult to determine whether a work should be considered dance, performance, or even sculpture. This conference examines whether a more generalized rubric such as "movement" may be a productive starting point for the investigation of creative cohesions between these varied artistic practices.

The conference brings together a dynamic group of artists and scholars to participate in a day of lectures, dialogues, screenings, and performances that explore moments of intersection between the visual arts, dance, and other forms of performance. Featured speakers are Elise Archias, Martin Kersels, Carrie Lambert-Beatty, Babette Mangolte, Peggy Phelan, and Branislav Jakovljevic.

Throughout the day on the grounds of the Getty Center, the artist collective LA Art Girls presents short performances, interventions, and other impromptu activities inspired by Fluxus performance scores in the collections of the Getty Research Institute.

Admission to the Friday conference is free but seating reservations are required. To attend, please make a reservation by visiting www.getty.edu or calling (310) 440-7300. Note, late arrivals cannot be guaranteed seating. Parking is $7.00 per car.
